Abstract

Vampire and Vampirism have raised the interests of the public from 1700s. Vampire is being used as a lens to discuss social issues in the real world. However, it is seen that there are limited works discussing the situation of coloured communities. This project is to examine female vampire figures in select works and evaluate the extent to which those figures are able to represent an empowered image of women of colour. To achieve this aim, textual analysis will be used to examine classical vampire literature, such as Sheridan Le Fanu’s “Carmilla” (1872/2003), Mary E. Wilkins Freeman’s “Luella Miller” (1902/2014), Bram Stoker’s Dracula (2007), Anne O’Brien Rice’s Interview with the Vampire (1976/2010) and L. A. Banks’s Minion (2003). There will be interdisciplinary reading of the social situation and behavior of the colored alongside with textual analysis of Jewelle Gomez’s The Gilda Stories: A Novel (1991) and Octavia E. Butler’s Fledgling: A Novel (2005). I will conclude that vampire literature has the ability and potentiality to reflect social behavior and environment of the coloured, especially coloured women. The contribution of this thesis is to demonstrate that reflecting the situation of the coloured can be a new area for vampire literature to explore in the future development and evolution of vampire literature as a genre. This is also breakthrough to the function of vampire literature as a genre because on top of appearing as entertainment and reflection of society, vampire literature is able to serve social function to empower and enlighten readers by raising their awareness to social issues that people are used to neglect.
Table of Contents

Declaration i
Abstract ii
Acknowledgment iii
List of Figures viii

1 Chapter One: Introduction 1

2 Chapter Two: Development of Second Wave Feminism and Empowerment 16
2.1 The Problem of Second Wave Feminisms 17
2.2 The Rise of the Third Wave Feminisms 22

3 Chapter Three: Vampire Literature in the Eighteenth to Nineteenth Centuries: Women as Powerless Objects 30
3.1 Sheridan Le Fanu’s “Carmilla” (1872/2003): Protection, Lesbian and Empowerment 31
3.2 Mary E. Wilkins Freeman’s “Luella Miller” (1902/2014) and Bram Stoker’s Dracula (2007): Lack of Self-Consciousness and Gender Role 39
3.3 Anne O’Brien Rice’s Interview with the Vampire (1976/2010): Object for Manipulation, Empowerment and Autonomy 47
3.4 L. A. Banks’ Minion (2003): Female Vampire as an Object and An Empowering Female Vampire Huntress 52

4.1 Slavery 65
4.2 Sexual Violence 77
4.3 Preserving Culture and Traditions and Raising Consciousness 91

Conclusion: A Demonstration of an Empowered Image of Women in Coloured Communities and the Potential Development of Vampire Literature as a Genre 107

Bibliography 115
Appendix 1: Summary of Jewelle Gomez’s The Gilda Stories: A Novel 122
Curriculum Vitae