Abstract

Wenyi film has long been a research focus of Chinese film studies since the 1980s. An abundance of scholars has been writing on the topic of wényǐ film, defining its generic nature as “literature and art film” or film adaptation of great literature, or understanding it in relation to themes of love and human relationships. Many scholars have explored the role of wényǐ films in post-war Hong Kong and Taiwan cinemas. Yet, in terms of Republican Chinese cinema, only brief accounts on some wényǐ directors or works can be found.

This dissertation aims to answer the question of “what is wenyi film?” by studying materials from the 1910s to the 1940s. Wényǐ film as a discursive notion was never static in that period of time and the notion intersects with different discourses and practices. By investigating the interaction between the notion and those discourses and practices, this dissertation aims to present a taxonomy of wényǐ film as grouped under the themes of romance, family, national character, heroism and the people.
Table of Contents

DECLARATION........................................................................................................i

Abstract .............................................................................................................ii

Acknowledgement.............................................................................................iii

Table of Contents .............................................................................................iv

List of Figures ....................................................................................................vi

Chapter 1.  Introduction: Wenyi Film and its Modes of Expressions in Republican China................................................................. 1

1.1.  The Geneology of Wenyi Film................................................................. 2

1.2.  Wenyi Film and Mode of Expression................................................... 6

1.3.  Beyond Romance and Family ................................................................. 9

1.4.  Mapping Cultural Expressions in Republican China ......................... 12

1.5.  The Four Intersections: Romance, Family, Hero and the People ...... 15

1.5.1.  Romance................................................................................................. 15

1.5.2.  Family .................................................................................................. 16

1.5.3.  Hero....................................................................................................... 18

1.5.4.  The People........................................................................................... 20

Chapter 2.  Ailqing: Death, Face and Affection-Image ................................ 22

2.1.  Ailqing: The Label.................................................................................. 23

2.2.  Narrative Structure: Six-phase Ailqing Route................................... 31

2.3.  The Face of Ailqing .............................................................................. 33

2.4.  The Affection-images of Ailqing on Screen: New Women (1935), The Rich House (1942) and Broken Spring Dreams (1955) ................. 39

2.5.  Conclusion................................................................................................. 46

Chapter 3.  Between Large and Small Family: Family-themed Wenyi Film ..48