A Sociological Case Study of Migration in Xinjiang, China:
Motivation of In-migrants to Xinjiang Production and Construction Corps

ZHANG Feng

A thesis submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Philosophy

August 1999

Hong Kong Baptist University
ABSTRACT

After the foundation of People's Republic of China, there was a succession of large waves of migrants from other provinces in Central China moving to Xinjiang, including groups that went to the Xinjiang Production and Construction Corps (XJPCC). This thesis seeks to understand this process both in the context of the political, military, economic, and social situation at the macro-level of the nation and at the personal and social micro-level of the individual migrants. The thesis aims to provide an understanding of why these people moved to settle in XJPCC and how the changing socio-economic contexts affected these migrants' lives.

Evidence shows that in different periods after 1950, the in-migrants to XJPCC included retired and demobilized soldiers, prisoners and other 'criminal' offenders, political exiles, Zhibian Youth and Intellectual Youth, hunger-driven migrants, money-seekers, marriage migrants and family dependents. These people were driven by a range of different motivations. Research into their life course experiences provides a clear example of the way in which different government policies affect individuals' lives, and of how certain individuals rationally respond to the changes in the socio-economic situation by choice of migration in search of survival or better lives.

As a consequence of this detailed analyses the author criticizes the arbitrary distinction between the categories of 'forced' and 'voluntary' migrations arguing that this does not reveal the real experiences of migrants to XJPCC. To better explain the situation, he re-examines the role of governmental policies and personal social capital as mechanisms affecting migration. Finally he reiterates the argument that migrants' own desire for economic benefits has been a significant incentive for migration.
Contents

Declaration | i
Abstract | ii
Acknowledgments | iii
Contents | vi
List of Tables | viii
List of Diagrams | ix
Explanation of Chinese Terms | x

Chapter 1  Introduction

Chapter 2  Literature Review

- Migratory Motives | 6
- Research Focused upon Migration in the Chinese Mainland | 19

Chapter 3  Key Concepts, Research Methods and

- Migration and | 25
- Research | 28
- Field Surveys | 29
- Limitations of Data and Methods | 36

Chapter 4  General Information on Xinjiang and XJPCC

- Introduction to | 39
- Xinjiang Production and Construction Corps | 42

Chapter 5  Contextualization of Shilian as a Settlement

Chapter 6  Demobilized and Retired Soldiers

- Macro-information | 69
- Micro-information | 72

Chapter 7  Prisoners and Exiles

- Settlement of Prisoners | 81
- Political Exiles | 93

Chapter 8  Ideological Migrants: Zhilian Youth and Zhiqing
Chapter 9 Hunger-driven Migrants

Great Leap Forward and the Big Famine 118
Hunger-driven Migrants 125

Chapter 10 Money-seekers

Reform of Land Policy 143
Reform of Population Registration Policy 144
Resident Registration System in 103rd Regiment 147
Money-seekers 148

Chapter 11 Marriage and Family Dependents as Migrants

Macro Information 159
Marriage Migrants 162
Family Dependents as Migrants 170

Chapter 12 Discussion and Conclusion

Motivations and Types of Migration: micro decisions in 175
A macro context
Social Capital as a Migratory Mechanism 179
Panned/Forced – Voluntary/Spontaneous? 180
Economic Dominance 182

References 184

Appendix 1 Map of Xinjiang 190
Appendix 2 Data Collection Document Used in the First Survey 191
Appendix 3 Key Points/Questions of Aide Memoir Used 193
in Second Survey
Appendix 4 Background Information about Informants 195
Appendix 5 Abbreviations 200
Appendix 6 Glossary 201
Appendix 7 Curriculum Vitae 204