Gender and Marriage -
Network Integration and Network Restructuring of the Newlyweds in Hong Kong

HO Wai Kwan

A thesis submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Philosophy

Principal Supervisor:  Dr. LAI Wan Foon Gina

Hong Kong Baptist University

September 2006
ABSTRACT

Marriage brings together two families and two previously minimally-related or unrelated personal networks, resulting in a network of different structure and composition. In fact, the network restructuring process is gradually maintained when two individuals meet and engage in a romantic relationship. However, this network aspect of marital life receives relatively less research attention. It is unclear how the processes of network change take place and how couples realign their changing social relations. In this study, 15 pairs of Hong Kong recently married heterosexual couple are interviewed to examine the integration and restructuring of the two partners’ personal networks. Taking the gendered meanings of marriage into consideration, this study adopts the gender perspective to guide the understanding of the network processes in the course of marital coupling. Findings of this study suggest that the integration of two networks tends to be superficial and segmented. Despite the fact that the two networks are structurally linked, the affective bonding is rather weak. Further, social networks serve as the social control system for the enforcement of gender norms as well as the platform on which men and women actively affirm and negotiate their gender. Network processes are found to be related to the presentation of a new set of highly gendered identities acquired through marriage. Influenced by these gendered identities, men and women report different experiences with the structural and relational changes of their networks, and display different network behaviors. Gender norms, nevertheless, are not simply passed down to the individuals. Men and women would resist, negotiate, and redefine the gendered scripts attached to their identities. Since women’s identities and roles are under closer social surveillance, women encounter greater demands and restrictions for the presentation of gender than their spouses, and are also engaged in greater resistance vis-à-vis their network members. The presentation and negotiation of gendered identities in social interactions make the reproduction of gender routine and seemingly natural.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Declaration .................................................................................................................. i
Abstract ...................................................................................................................... ii
Acknowledgments ...................................................................................................... iii
Table of Contents ...................................................................................................... iv
List of Tables ............................................................................................................ vii

Chapter 1  Introduction ......................................................................................... 1
A.  Marriage as a Network Project ........................................................................ 1
B.  Theoretical Background of the Study and Research Issues .......................... 3
C.  Potential Contributions of the Study ................................................................. 4
D.  Organization of the Thesis ................................................................................ 6

Chapter 2  Literature Review ................................................................................ 7
A.  Marriage and Social Network ............................................................................ 8
   1. Twin processes of network change – network integration ..................... 8
   2. Twin processes of network change – realignment of social ties .......... 10
B.  Gender and Social Network .............................................................................. 12
C.  Gender and Marital Relations ......................................................................... 15
D.  Conclusion .......................................................................................................... 18

Chapter 3  Research Issues and Theoretical Framework .................................... 20
A.  Research Gaps ..................................................................................................... 20
B.  Theoretical Framework ...................................................................................... 22
   1. The gender perspective ............................................................................. 22
   2. The identity theory .................................................................................... 23
   3. Integrating the gender perspective and the identity theory ............. 25
C.  Research Questions ............................................................................................ 25
D.  Marriage in Hong Kong ..................................................................................... 26

Chapter 4  Research Design ................................................................................ 30
A.  Research Method ............................................................................................... 30
B.  Recruitment of Respondents .......................................................................... 32
C.  Research Limitation ......................................................................................... 33
D. Description of Respondents’ Background ........................................... 34
   1. Demographic characteristics ....................................................... 34
   2. Living arrangement ..................................................................... 35

Chapter 5  Network Processes of Marital Coupling .................................. 37

A. Structural Processes ........................................................................ 37
   1. Network integration ................................................................. 38
      a. Preparation stage before network integration ..................... 38
      b. Network diffusion .............................................................. 40
      c. Segmented integration ....................................................... 45
   2. Readjustment of personal network .............................................. 47
      a. Addition of new ties – shared ties and personal ties ........... 47
      b. Withdrawal of social ties .................................................... 50

B. Relational Processes ....................................................................... 53
   1. Realignment of relationship with personal ties ......................... 54
   2. Relational relationship with partner’s network ties .................. 56

C. Conclusion ................................................................................... 59

Chapter 6  Gender and Network Processes ........................................... 62

A. Marital Identity and Network Processes ....................................... 62
B. Presenting Gendered Identities through Reorganizing of Social Ties .... 66
   1. The presentation of gendered identities .................................. 66
      a. The identity as boyfriend/girlfriend .................................... 66
      b. The identity as husband/wife .............................................. 68
      c. The identity as son-in-law/daughter-in-law ....................... 73
      d. The identity as married son/married daughter .................. 78
      e. The identity as married man/married woman .................... 80
   2. Gender and membership in network ....................................... 82

C. The Gender Identity and Network Boundary ............................... 85
   1. Gendered network activities ............................................... 85
   2. Gender composition of network ............................................ 86
   3. Gendered language used in social interactions ....................... 88
   4. Gendered segregation in joint social interactions .................. 88

D. Conclusion .................................................................................. 90

Chapter 7  Social Network and Reproduction of Gender .................... 93

A. Social Accountability in Social Network ...................................... 93
1. Social accountability and network activities .................................................. 93
2. Perceived accountability ................................................................................. 97
3. Social learning .................................................................................................. 99
B. Social Enforcement of Gender Norms ................................................................. 101
C. The Reproduction of Gender ........................................................................... 105
  1. Multiple interpretations of gender scripts ....................................................... 105
  2. Negotiation and resistance in the performance of gender ................................. 107
  3. Gender differences in the reproduction of gender ............................................ 113
D. Conclusion ........................................................................................................ 115

Chapter 8 Conclusion .......................................................................................... 117

A. Network Processes of Marital Coupling ......................................................... 117
B. Social Network and the Reproduction of Marital and Gender Identities .......... 119
C. Social Action: Between Social Structure and Human Agency ......................... 121
D. The Network Aspect of Marital Life .................................................................. 122
E. The Gender Perspective as an Alternative Approach to Gender Differences in Social Network ................................................................. 123
F. Gendered Network Processes and Gender Inequality in Social Capital ............... 124
G. Implications for the Study of Marriage and Family in Hong Kong .................. 126
H. Suggestions for Future Research ..................................................................... 127

References ........................................................................................................... 132

Curriculum Vitae .................................................................................................. 140